PATTY BATTLE

BIG GUNS KNOCKED DOWN A FEW PEGS BY 'BETTER BURGERS'

Chicago Tribune

Five Guys Burgers and Fries topped a new survey of favorite burger chains, leaving bigger chains McDonald's and Burger King in the dust.

Market Force Information questioned 7,600 consumers, calculated the fan favorite based on total votes and then factored in the number of locations for each chain.

In every region, Five Guys led the list. Overall, In-N-Out was second, followed by Fuddruckers, A&W and Smashburger.

Dairy Queen ranked last in the group of 16 chains considered. Burger King, Hardee's, McDonald's and Jack in the Box rounded out the bottom five.

Five Guys ranked best in categories including food quality and taste, service, cleanliness and atmosphere. The only category in which it failed to rank No. 1 was best overall value; In-N-Out won that category.

Smashburger, a newcomer in the so-called better burger industry, ranked second in every category except overall value.

McDonald's and Hardee's shared the bottom ranking for overall value. Jack in the Box was last in the food quality and cleanliness categories. Hardee's was deemed to have the worst service, while Dairy Queen's atmosphere was voted the most lacking.

"Five Guys does zero advertising, but by delivering consistently great customer experience, they're able to build a word-of-mouth buzz that continues to bring new customers through the door," Market Force Chief Marketing Officer Janet Eden-Harris said in a statement.

In another customer survey this summer, McDonald's came in last for customer satisfaction. The American Consumer Satisfaction Index found pizza chain Papa John's the most fulfilling, followed by Subway and Little Caesars.

Burger King and KFC also left patrons wanting more, according to that survey.

Is this Chicago's best bathroom?

Georgia Garvey

gggarvey@tribune.com
@gggarvey

RedEye dining editor Lisa Arnett may have reviewed the ground-breaking restaurant Next, and movie critic Matt Pais might get RedEye's first look at "The Hobbit," but I lucked into the once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to visit the restrooms at the Radisson Blu.

Please stifle your overwhelming jealousy.

Why the Radisson, you may ask? Well, Cintas, a company that designs and builds "full-service restroom programs" for companies, has scoured the nation every year for the past decade seeking the nation's best bathrooms.

In 2011, the restroom at the Field Museum took top honors, but the city's only 2012 nominee in the Top 10 is at the Radisson Blu Aqua Hotel in the Loop. The Radisson battles it out this year with tough competition such as the Virginia Tech stadium bathrooms and Liberty Market in Gilbert, Ariz.

Voting on Cintas' website ends Oct. 26, but in the meantime, RedEye could hardly pass up a shot at judging the Windy City's entry.

I visited both downstairs women's bathrooms at the Radisson Blu in an undercover operation that would make Woodward and Bernstein proud.

On my way to the restrooms, I ambled past a piece of art featuring a young woman smoking a joint, prompting high hopes for the relaxing experience inside.

Not entirely to my surprise (I cheated and looked at pictures before I went), I found the bathroom walls were floor-to-ceiling mirrored tiles, accented with floor-length mirrors and more mirrors over the sinks.

I mean, there are a lot of reflective surfaces, so if you're really self-conscious or believe mirrors steal a piece of your soul, this might not be the bathroom for you.

There was a distinct lack of smell in the premises, the best-case scenario for any restroom, and the music was a soothing blend of space-age Yanni and the soundtrack to a David Lynch movie.

Other than the dizzying amount of mirrors, there were few decorations. Potted aloe plants weren't forced to share counter space with much more than the piles of hand towels.

I didn't have to do much sharing, either, being the only person in both bathrooms. The good news, though, is that I had 573 of my reflections to keep me company.

Inside the dark-gray stalls, things could have been fancier. Yes, there was a sensor-activated toilet, but what self-respecting showpiece bathroom doesn't have those?

The toilet paper was two-ply and quilted, a bonus to be sure, but nothing outrageous.

I washed my hands (hey, I've seen "Contagion") with the gardenia-scented hand soap, which was harder to extract from the dispenser than it should have been.

Five pumps for one tiny dollop of soap?

After my exhaustive examination of the facilities, I sat on the couches before the fake fire in the lobby and sweated for a little bit.

I asked myself: What kind of verdict could I give the finest restrooms in Chicago?

Did the Blu Aqua compare to the medieval grotto-like environs of Da Marino Ristorante in New York?

Could it hold a candle to the Art Deco simplicity of the Hollywood Bowl in California?

After some deliberation, I reached the following conclusion: The Radisson Blu's bathrooms may not be the fanciest in the country, they may not be the most technologically marvelous, and they may not dispense enough hand soap for the tastes of one reporter, but no bathroom (and I do mean, no bathroom) has more mirrors.

That has to count for something.

How will CPS pay for teacher raises? M-Rahm plays it vague on budget

Chicago Tribune

Chicago Public Schools teachers returned to their classrooms Wednesday with pay raises on the horizon after a seven-day strike, but details on how the cash-strapped district would pay for them remained scarce.

Mayor Emanuel said he would not rule out a property tax increase to pay for the double-digit raises laid out in a tentative agreement with the Chicago Teachers Union, but he chose to focus on unidentified cost-saving measures that he said would pay for the deal.

"We will continue to find savings in the central office, continue to do other things we have to do as a city to bring the budget in line," Emanuel said.

With CPS estimating it will face a $1 billion shortfall next year, one of those "other things" almost certainly will be a plan to close between 80 and 120 schools with low enrollment on the city's South and West sides, sources have told the Tribune.

Emanuel also had no desire to address that topic Wednesday.

"I can't sit here and say within the first five minutes of this contract being negotiated that I can tell you exactly what's going to happen four or five months from now," Emanuel said at Chopin Elementary School in Humboldt Park.

"Look, we have work to do, as we're every day restructuring, making reforms. We're looking at everything fresh."

On the day teachers returned to work, the mayor wasn't the only one not offering details.

Both CPS and the union declined to release copies of the contract that teachers will vote on, though both have released summaries of major provisions.

CPS officials said they still were proofreading and fine-tuning the document, adding that they hoped to have it completed by late this week or early next week.

Bob Bruno, a professor at the School of Labor and Employment Relations at the University of Illinois, said it's not unusual for an employer and union to decline to release a complete copy of a tentative contract to avoid allowing public pressure or media coverage to jeopardize approval of the deal.

"Those kinds of pressures can pollute or distort things," Bruno said. "You do want people to have a period of quiet time to reflect, put aside emotions and biases, and consider the document."

Teachers will formally vote in the coming weeks on the three-year contract proposal, which includes an option that both sides would have to agree to for a fourth year.

That, however, was not on the mind of Kerrie Badalucco, who teaches fifth- through eighth-grade science at Lakeview's Hamilton Elementary School.

"Today felt like the first day of school again—a day to start fresh," Badalucco said, adding that she and other teachers at Hamilton made sure to address the strike Wednesday and let students ask questions.

CTA ready to invest in art

By Tracy Swartz

REDEYE

The CTA said Tuesday it will spend up to $525,000 for art at seven North Side Red Line stations undergoing rehabilitation.

The CTA is soliciting submissions from artists to determine who will create artwork that will hang at the Lawrence, Argyle, Berwyn, Thorndale, Granville, Morse and Jarvis stops. Installations are expected to occur in September 2013.

The budget for each station will be between $45,000 and $99,000, the CTA said Tuesday at a public meeting at the Broadway Armory in Edgewater. The project is being paid for with federal funds, the CTA said.

Submissions from artists are due Oct. 10. After the deadline, a CTA committee will review the applications and select 25 artists to submit proposals. These artists each will receive $500.

The CTA will review the proposals and choose seven artists to create the art for the seven stations.

A second public meeting for the art project will be Thursday. Go to transitchicago.com/red-northart for more information.

Homicides
from Sept. 12
to 4 p.m. Wednesday.

HOMICIDE TRACKER

By Tracy Swartz

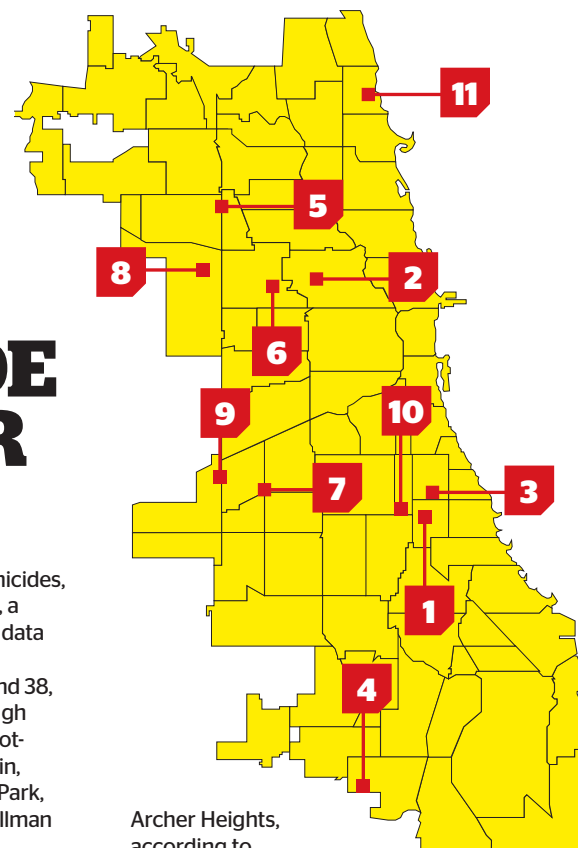

TSWARTZ@TRIBUNE.COM | @TRACYSWARTZ

After four days last week without homicides, Chicago saw 11 homicides in five days, a RedEye analysis of preliminary police data found.

Nine men, between the ages of 21 and 38, were shot to death from Sept. 12 through Monday, RedEye determined. The shootings occurred in Austin, Belmont Cragin, Edgewater, Garfield Ridge, Humboldt Park, Washington Park, Fuller Park, West Pullman and West Town.

Meanwhile, a 38-year-old woman was beaten to death Sept. 13 in the 5000 block of South Prairie Avenue in Grand Boulevard, police said.

A man was found stabbed to death Saturday in the 4800 block of South Avers Avenue in Archer Heights, according to officials.

Twenty-one homicides have been logged so far this month. Thirty-nine homicides were recorded in September 2011, RedEye determined.

After search, no plane in lake

Emergency crews responded to the downtown lakefront Wednesday after someone called 911 about a plane in the lake, but crews found nothing and local airports reported no missing planes, officials said.

More than 60 Fire Department personnel, including a special water operations chief and a dive coordinator, responded to the area near Randolph Street and the lakefront, department spokeswoman Meg Ahlheim said. TRIBUNE

1 Spinach recall announced

The Kroger chain of grocery stores announced Tuesday that it has issued a voluntary recall of bagged spinach on fears of listeria contamination. The recall affects 10-ounce bagged Fresh Selections Tender Spinach, with a "best if used by" date of Sept. 16.

2 French mag stokes controversy

After a week of deadly international protests against an anti-Islam film, a French satirical magazine on Wednesday published cartoons featuring a figure resembling the Prophet Mohammed, which many Muslims consider blasphemous.

3 Cough, cough. Pilots call in sick

American Airlines has canceled more than 300 flights since Sunday and will cut back on the number of flights through the end of October, because pilots, unhappy with their labor contract, have started to call in sick, the airline said Wednesday.

4 Claim: Martin didn't touch gun

The gun that George Zimmerman used to kill Trayvon Martin—a gun that Zimmerman told police the teenager had reached for—revealed no evidence that Trayvon touched it, according to new evidence released Wednesday.

5 Benghazi attack tied to terrorists

The assault on the U.S. consulate in Benghazi last week in which four Americans died was a "terrorist attack" that may have had an al-Qaida connection, a top U.S. counterterrorism official told Congress on Wednesday.

6 Jackson Jr.'s house on market

Rep. Jesse Jackson Jr., who has been on a medical leave of absence for three months, has put his Victorian-style townhouse in Washington, D.C., on the market for $2.5 million, according to a real estate listing.

Chick-fil-A to change policy for donations

Chick-fil-A has pledged to stop giving money to anti-gay groups and to back off political and social debates after an executive's comments this summer landed the fast-food chain smack in the middle of the gay marriage debate.

The Civil Rights Agenda, which dubs itself the largest LGBT advocacy group in Illinois, said Chick-fil-A agreed in meetings to stop donating to groups such as Focus on the Family and the National Organization for Marriage. Such groups oppose same-sex marriage.

A report from LGBT advocacy group Equality Matters found that between 2003 and 2009, Chick-fil-A donated more than $3 million to Christian groups that oppose homosexuality. In 2010, the fast food company gave nearly $2 million to such causes, according to the report.

The LGBT collective said the Atlanta-based restaurant chain also sent a letter, signed by its senior director of real estate, to Chicago Ald. Proco "Joe" Moreno (1st).

Chick-fil-A said in the missive that its non-profit arm, the WinShape Foundation, "is now taking a much closer look at the organizations it considers helping, and in that process will remain true to its stated philosophy of not supporting organizations with political agendas," according to TCRA.

Moreno helped fan this summer's controversy, after Chick-fil-A President Dan Cathy said his company was "guilty as charged" of supporting the biblical definition of the family unit. Moreno, who runs an increasingly trendy Northwest Side ward, said he would block the chain from opening shop in his area.

Now, according to the Tribune, Moreno has softened his stance and will allow Chick-fil-A in.

Feds punished in botched plan

Fourteen employees of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives and the U.S. Justice Department face disciplinary action for their roles in the botched Fast and Furious weapons-tracking program, according to a report released Wednesday by department investigators. No criminal charges are recommended, according to the report.

The program was doomed by a "series of misguided strategies, tactics, errors in judgment and management failures" on the part of line agents, prosecutors and senior Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives members in Washington, Justice Department investigators concluded in a report released Wednesday.

The report does not recommend any criminal sanctions against individuals in connection with the gun-trafficking operation.

The report finds that Attorney General Eric Holder was not informed of the controversial ATF operation until 2011 after the death of Border Patrol agent Brian Terry in December 2010.

WHAT'S IT LIKE CHASING GREEN BAY
QUARTERBACK AARON RODGERS?SHEA MCCLELLIN
& COREY WOOTTONINSIDE
THE HELMET

By Jack M Silverstein

FOR REDEYE

NFL plays are over in seconds, but you might not believe what goes on in players' heads in that short time. With that mind, RedEye brings you Inside the Helmet.

During the first quarter of the Sept. 13 Bears-Packers game, both offenses were locked down. The Packers faced second-and-16 from the Bears 39 when Bears rookie Shea McClellin nabbed his first NFL sack, which he shared with third-year defensive end Corey Wootton. McClellin and Wootton tell the story of sacking Aaron Rodgers.

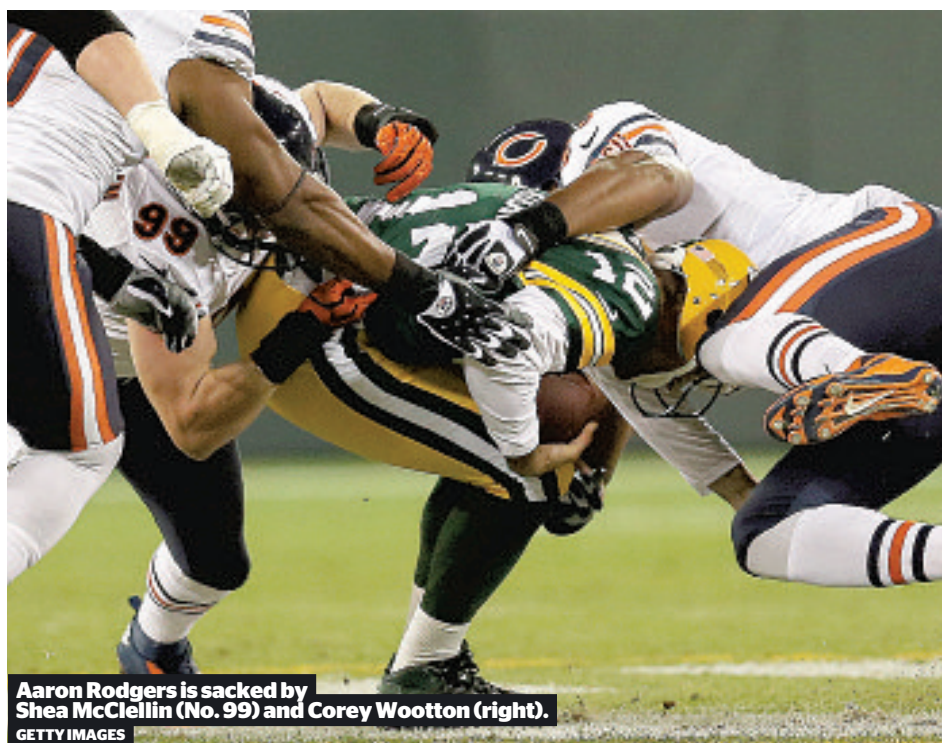

Take us through the play, Shea and Corey.

Corey Wootton: We had a "pirate" called, which is a stunt by myself and the defensive tackle. It's an inside stunt for both of us to go inside the gap. Shea had just a regular rush on the right side, and he had good pressure.

Shea McClellin: I wasn't involved in the line stunt. I have to wrap around and make sure the quarterback doesn't get through. I think it was second-and-long, so I'm thinking screen, draw, something like that. I get off the ball and just kind of give [the left tackle] a little head fake, and I dip my shoulder around the corner and I see Rodgers right there.

CW: I'm on the left end, Shea's on the right end, Henry Melton's the left defensive tackle, and [Amobi] Okoye is the right defensive tackle. Henry and myself stunt inside, Okoye comes outside around us for contain from the nose all the way to the outside, and then Shea just has a regular rush. He's a one-on-one against the guy. He beat him, and I was able to beat my guy as well.

SM: [Rodgers] actually almost slipped away, so it was good that Corey was there. I would have gotten him anyways, but Corey helped me out because I grabbed his jersey and he almost slipped away. I think one hand got away. But then I pulled him in and Corey was right there too.

CW: As I slanted in, there was a little crease in there. The coach always says "gap's going to open up," and it's a matter of one of us getting off because the guys slammed down on Henry. And I was able to push through my guy and get there.

So do you have an increase in heart rate when you get around the first wave of the line and then you realize "Here we go! There he is?"

SM: [Laughs.] It's kind of like your eyes get big, I guess. I wouldn't say an increased heart rate. You're thinking, "He's right there. Hopefully he doesn't throw this away." And fortunately it happened. I got to him.

CW: I knew we had him. Shea got to him first and I saw him there and got in on it too and was able to get half a sack.

The first half of the game, at least on TV, we were seeing a lot of sacks and then screaming from McClellin and Clay Matthews. Are you a yeller?

CW: Me? Not too much. I get excited after plays. After we had that play I got pretty excited. You got a couple seconds to celebrate and then you have to move on to the next snap.

SM: I'm a quiet guy right now, but on the field the intensity is up, and the emotion of the game gets you. So you kind of want to scream I guess. [Laughs.]

FANTASY FIX

Dan Richman

redeyesports
@tribune.com

Tom Brady, Drew Brees and Aaron Rodgers were Top-5 five picks in almost every fantasy draft. If you took one of these three, you are automatically thinking championship. But after two weeks they've looked nothing like fantasy studs. Will this trio rebound, or did you draft fool's gold?

Tom Brady

The master of style has compiled 552 yards passing, three touchdowns and an interception, though the Patriots have other issues. They face tough defenses in the coming weeks (Baltimore, Buffalo, Denver and Seattle), tight end Aaron Hernandez is out with an ankle sprain and Brandon Lloyd has yet to catch on to the offensive scheme. Brady usually is a fantasy monster; however, in the short term I think he will be more like a kitten. You can't rule out the Patriots leaning on the running game should Brady continue to struggle, either.

Drew Brees

The Saints are a mess; they sit at 0-2 and seem to miss coach Sean Payton. Brees has thrown for a solid 664 yards and four touchdowns, but those positives come with four interceptions. The good news is the Saints pass a ton, so even if they don't return to their winning ways, Brees will be productive for fantasy owners. Kansas City and Tampa Bay are on the schedule in the near future, which is just what the doctor ordered for him.

Aaron Rodgers

Mr. Discount Double Check was held in check in Week 1 but rebounded last week against the Bears. Rodgers will be a great player going forward. Cedric Benson is finding his way at running back, which will open up the passing game. The Green Bay schedule has New Orleans and Seattle the next two weeks, which means lots of fantasy points.

Bottom line, don't give up on these three just yet.

Ex-Bear Hurd faces 4 more charges

Former Bears receiver Sam Hurd faces four new federal drug charges, according to accusations coming in a superseding indictment filed Tuesday—the same day a plea deal with the government fell apart.

Hurd faces two counts of commission of a felony offense while on release and two counts of attempt to possess with intent to distribute a controlled substance, charges stemming from when he was taken into custody last month for violating conditions of his supervised release.

According to the indictment, while out on bond and living in San Antonio, Hurd attempted on June 6 to possess with intent to distribute between 50 kilograms and 100 kilograms of marijuana and at least 5 kilograms of cocaine.

Also on June 6, Hurd's cousin and co-defendant, Jesse Tyrone Chavful, was arrested for buying drugs at his T-shirt printing shop in San Antonio. Records show he later told prosecutors the drugs were for Hurd.

Hurd now faces six federal drug charges.

'End of Watch' co-stars find friendship in five months of cop training

By Miki Turner

FOR REDEYE

If "End of Watch" had been just "another predictable cop movie," Jake Gyllenhaal says, he would not have done it. "I chose this because it had heart," he said.

Gyllenhaal and Chicago native Michael Pena star as two LAPD police officers who spend half their time on the job chasing perps and the other half discussing the meaning of life and love. Although Brian Taylor (Gyllenhaal) and Mike Zavala (Pena) both are honorable officers, they become w a l k i n g targets for South Central gang members when their ambitions get the better of them.

"The heart of this movie is that we have this relationship and you can take us out of the context of being police officers and put us in another movie and it has that heart," Gyllenhaal told RedEye during an interview Monday at the Four Seasons in L.A. "End of Watch" opens Friday.

Like their characters on screen, L.A. native Gyllenhaal and Pena have become close friends. But that bond didn't happen right away, according to writer/director David Ayer, who told MCT the actors initially were barely on speaking terms. They couldn't agree on anything, Pena has said.

So Ayer assigned them months of police training, martial arts training, weapons training, sparring and ride-alongs with L.A. police officers, which strengthened their bond and gave them respect for each other's talents.

"The torture that I put them through made them become friends," Ayer told MCT. "It became 'Oh God, what have I created here?' They wouldn't shut up."

Their friendship is apparent in how the actors now praise each other.

"Jake was awesome," Pena said. "He was like, 'This is our movie.' You don't always get that. He's a friend now for life. He wanted me to do the best that I could possibly do. That does something to your psyche. He really took care of me."

Watching Pena rock his role is one of the things Gyllenhaal liked most about the job. He described Pena's performance as "absolutely compelling and inspired."

"For us that partnership, becoming brothers and coming from two different places definitely as people, was key," said Gyllenhaal, who also executive produced the film. "It took us a while to become close, but we are really incredibly close now."

Although the actors spent five months on the L.A. streets observing real officers, "End of Watch" was shot in just 22 days. On Gyllenhaal's first ride-along, a speeding train nearly nailed him. His unit was in pursuit of a stolen vehicle that got stalled on railroad tracks, and he and the officers pushed the car off the tracks with about 30 seconds to spare.

"When you're doing a ride-along there are hours and hours of boredom that are occasionally interspersed with a situation that can be violent," Gyllenhaal said. "The reality of what the job is hasn't always been rightly portrayed [in film]. ... We discovered a sense of humor and a real partnership, a brotherhood inside [the patrol cars]."

Chicago shooting star

By Matt Pais

REDEYE

Like many people, the L.A. cops who escorted “End of Watch” co-stars Michael Pena and Jake Gyllenhaal on ride-alongs couldn’t help but get excited around Gyllenhaal.

“It was kind of funny. Everybody’s like, ‘Jake! Jake! Jake! What’s up?’” says the 36-year-old Pena, who grew up at 16th and California and went to Marist High School in Chicago. But that changed once they got in patrol cars, he said. “As soon as we went on patrol they were like, ‘Yeah yeah, yeah, hold up a sec.’ They were policing. They were super cool cops.”

Audiences for “End of Watch” will get a rare, intimate look at police work when the film opens Friday. The film follows officers Taylor (Gyllenhaal) and Zavala (Pena) as they patrol a particularly dangerous part of South Central L.A. The actors endured five months of training for the roles and during the nightly ride-alongs, Pena told RedEye at the Park Hyatt, he saw people shot in the face and arms and a “bloody mess over here, bloody mess over there.”

How aware were you of violence in Chicago growing up here?

I remember I had my first bike for half an hour. I got beat up and it got taken away. It was pretty brutal.

How long did you wait until you got another bike?

Oh my God, I think my dad built me a bike. [The one that was stolen] was like a Huffy BMX bike, which were super awesome at the time. We couldn’t afford it very much. That was like my birthday present. I think he got like the body of a bike, which wasn’t even really like a bike, it was like a motorcycle. So heavy, dude. And he built the fork, like welded some things and actually built the fork; it was so hard. The wheels were small. [Laughs.] I never got made fun of, though.

And no one stole it.

Nobody wanted to steal it. I could literally leave it with a bow and they’re like, “Man, I ain’t gonna steal that.” ‘Cause who’s gonna sell it, dude? With the welding and stuff. Dude, nobody’s going to sell it.

How did you react when you saw shootings during the ride-alongs? I’m sure you’re trying to play it cool, but was there a moment when you jumped?

Yeah, for sure. Especially the first day of shooting. They did their gang signs, like, “Get outta here, man!” We weren’t shooting on soundstages, man, that’s for sure. We were shooting in the thick of it. And they were beeping and trying to get us out and there was a loud pop. And all of us, including the real policemen, went for our weapons. I was like, “I got a fake weapon. What am I gonna do?”

Michael Pena
E. JASON WAMBSGANS/TRIBUNE

It seems like you and Jake really bonded from going through this experience together. How much would you recommend friends who are hanging out saying, “Hey, let’s take this bond to the next level. Let’s go on a ride-along”?

Dude, that would actually be, like—you mean to be romantic? Like a bromance? “Bro, you want to take it to the next level? Would you die for me, bro?” That would be something that Will Ferrell would say, “Do you want to take it to the next level, man? Do you want to be romantic? If you want this bromance to take it to the next level, let’s go on a ride along. Let’s do it, bro!”

That’s a good idea, right?

[Laughs.] Yeah. That’s an epic idea, dude. I think family members should do that. ‘Cause me and my brother literally fought all the time, dude. Physically, everything. I bet you if we sat and saw the world the way it really is and we woke up to it we’re like, “OK, we need to calm down.” Even though we lived in a bad neighborhood—the thing is, when you live in a bad neighborhood you run away from trouble. You run away from the cops. In this instance, they are the cops and they run toward the trouble. So it’s actually gnarlier than you think it is. MPAIS@TRIBUNE.COM | @MATTPAIS

Witnessing murders, domestic disputes and other heinous criminal acts all are things that might make two actors scoot a little closer to each other in the back of a patrol car. But for Gyllenhaal, the bond with Pena went even deeper. Pena and Ayer gave Gyllenhaal a crash course in “Latino 101,” and as a result Gyllenhaal has a new appreciation for Latino culture.

“This movie changed my life,” Gyllenhaal said. “The Spanish culture that David Ayer introduced me to, and being around Michael ... it was so inspiring to me. The running joke on the set was that I should marry a Mexican girl!”

The fun didn’t end there, Gyllenhaal said. The violent situations the characters face in the film “are all based on things that happened” in real life, Gyllenhaal said. Still, the scenes with him and Pena in the squad car—which were shot in just a day and a half—were his favorites.

“When you’re working with a great actor and you get to play with good writing,” he said. “To me that whole day-and-a-half was probably the most fun to shoot.”

'The Hobbit'

Nothing new in 'Hobbit' tease

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» @mattpais

At this point it's hard not to chuckle at the title "The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey," since Peter Jackson's "The Lord of the Rings" trilogy has given us plenty to expect for his return to the J.R.R. Tolkien well.

In the trailer for the first installment of Jackson's prequel to "LOTR," out Dec. 14, we see the vividly realized Middle Earth just as we remember it: towering mountains, deceptively simple maps, long treks across dangerous terrain and, yes, Gollum, with Andy Serkis' creepy voice giving life to a creature both lovable and terrifying.

Martin Freeman looks to make a good Bilbo Baggins, and Ian McKellen's Gandalf should take all voiceover gigs that Morgan Freeman passes on—if documentaries and commercials want their material to sound really, really grandiose.

Those who shrugged off "The Lord of the Rings" films will have no reason to care about "The Hobbit," but everyone else—and considering the previous trilogy's earnings, that's a big group of people around the world—should be satisfied to see that Jackson's clearly picking up right where he left off.

Uh, at the beginning.

BEAN FIEND

When instant just won't do, 5 new coffee shops have your cup ready

By Jessica Reid Johnson | FOR REDEYE

When a caffeine craving sneaks up, you don't have to venture far to find your fix, whether at a boutique roaster such as Metropolis or Intelligentsia or the drive-thru at Dunkin' Donuts. Lucky for serious coffee fans, the past four months have brought five new options for fueling up. The latest crop of coffee shops are setting themselves apart by shipping in rare beans, roasting beans right on-site and even concocting their own syrups for flavored lattes.

Big Shoulders

1105 W. Chicago Ave. 312-888-3042

Opened: June

Having transitioned from chef de cuisine to chef de coffee, Tim Coonan brings 30 years of experience working in restaurants in Southern France, New York, and Chicago (including 7 years at Spiaggia) to this West Town roastery. Coonan began his business after five years of roasting in his home and delivering by bicycle across the city, and his roasts represent the same meticulous attention to detail that his former fine-dining gigs demanded. He currently roasts four varieties of beans on-site from Guatemala, Ethiopia, Brazil and Colombia, and beans are brewed four ways: auto-drip, espresso, French press and through the Clever Coffee Dripper, a snazzy system of brewing that combines the best features of French press and filter drip ($2-$4 for a 16-ounce cup).

Bow Truss Coffee Roasters

2934 N. Broadway 773-857-1361

Opened: June

In the past 15 years, Phillip Tadros has opened a string of coffee shops—Kickstand, Dollop and Noble Tree, plus revamped cafes at Colombia College—and after years of reselling beans from other roasters, he wanted more control over the product. So he assembled an expert team of coffee professionals (largely ex-Intelligentsians) to directly source coffee from farms and roast it on-site in a welcoming East Lakeview space. Bow Truss has amassed enough of a following over the summer that Tadros has ordered a second roaster to meet the growing demand. Coffee is brewed two ways—auto drip and pour-over—and current offerings include a Guatemalan, Ethiopian and Colombian roast ($2 to $5 a cup).

NIGHTCRAWLERS

SEEN ON THE SCENE AT... BEVY, 215 W. ONTARIO ST.

We spent a Saturday night at sleek River North club Bevy, where a stylish crowd partied to eardrum-rattling sounds. CRAIG SEYMOUR / FOR REDEYE

Roman Komlev
27, student

What brought you out tonight?
I've come here just to have a good time. I love the music. I love the people.

What are you drinking and why?
Vodka with some lime juice just to get relaxed, to get my mind off school.

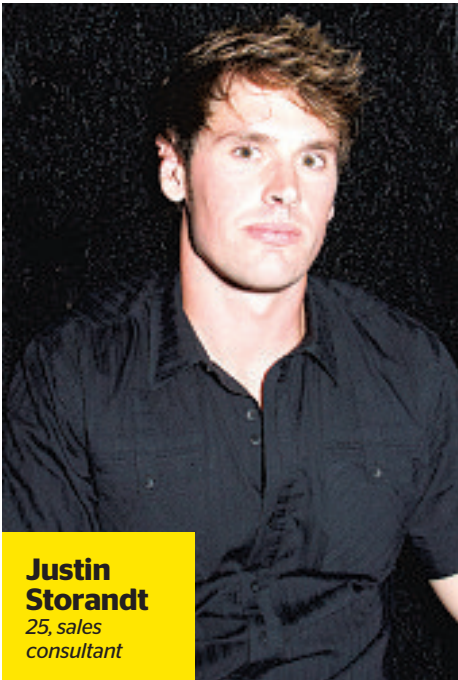

What's your best pick-up line?
I love your shoes, but they'd look better on my shoulders.

Nicole Noelliste
22, law student

What brought you out tonight?
It's my birthday.

What life lesson did you learn last year, at 21?
I went to law school early at 21, so I learned to just be very responsible. To be cognizant of my blessings and take them very seriously.

Justin Storandt
25, sales consultant

What brought you out tonight?
I'm new to town.

How does this club compare with clubs in St. Louis?
I love this place. The music's good. The girls are good.

ROOKIE OF THE YEAR

FASHION WUNDERKIND TAVI GEVINSON TAKING THE WORLD BY STORM

Chicago Tribune

Tavi Gevinson, for whom we all will work one day, was walking home from school, books pressed to her chest, skirt swishing. It was a portrait of suburban idyll, the first day of class at Oak Park and River Forest High School. And yet, during the first two class periods, she held back tears, she said. She didn't have friends in those classes and couldn't help thinking she had a great summer and now, with the start of her junior year, it was gone.

In a way, she hadn't had a summer: She spent June in the library compiling "Rookie: Yearbook One," her first book; then edited it; then Rookie (rookiemag.com), her online magazine for teenage girls, hit its creative stride, drawing hundreds of thousands of readers a month. She also acted in her first film and went on an Urban Outfitters-sponsored, 16-city road trip with Rookie staff, meeting the community of independent-minded teens who've come to regard the 16-year-old as a droll, discerning impresario of teendom.

More important, it was the summer that Gevinson began to transition from novelty to established voice—from being an unnervingly precious middle-school fashion blogger, profiled by the New Yorker at 14 and feted by the fashion industry at 12 (so self-possessed that she turned down "The Oprah Winfrey Show"), to being an unnervingly incisive and poised media brand with staying power. (At 7 p.m. Thursday, she will discuss the "Rookie: Yearbook One," released this month, at Unity Temple in Oak Park.)

And now, transformative summer kaput, she had English again.

Her teacher asked students to stand and say something about themselves. Gevinson, joking, said she was disappointed her required summer reading, "Montana 1948," was unaffiliated with Hannah Montana. But then another student introduced himself by saying something quasi-shocking/thoughtless and the exercise curdled. She became glum. She remembers thinking: "After a summer of being around people who are sarcastic but positive and not going out of their way to be provocative ... really? We are really doing this? It's so immature."

Tavi Gevinson was a guest on "Late Night With Jimmy Fallon" on Sept. 11. GETTY IMAGES

Then again, Gevinson is uncommonly mature, said Steve Goldberg, her former philosophy teacher: "Part 16-year-old, part 30-year-old sophisticate. I had a lovely, smart student who confided in me she was jealous of Tavi, a little intimidated. She wanted to hate Tavi, but as she got to know and talk to Tavi, she found it impossible."

On that sunny first day of school, Gevinson came home to a dining room full of boxes. She had shipped them back from L.A. a few days earlier. Gevinson has a wide face, dark eyes, yellow bangs and the husky voice and deadpan manner of a character in a Wes Anderson movie. She walks to the boxes. "This is partly why I've been feeling emotional," she said. Each box overflowed with handmade presents that fans gave her on the road trip.

"This reeks of nail polish in a good way. This has sequins. This also has sequins. This"—she held up a coat with "2 Kool 4 Skool" stitched on the back—"is from these girls who asked me to join their girl gang."

She paused to explain: The tour ended in L.A., where Rookie staff, working in a gallery owned by Urban Outfitters, created an art installation of a teenage girl's bedroom. They asked fans to contribute stuff from their bedrooms. The theme was friendship and fandom, "which are big when you're a teenager," Gevinson told me. "They can seem otherworldly and powerful. But then everything is so new when you're a teenager."

She reached back in the box.

She unfolded a letter and read: "Tavi, the memory of a bunch of Rookie girls in a circle after the 'Freaks and Geeks' marathon, sharing blankets and memories and languages and how Justin Bieber is underrated and Taylor Swift is amazing, is a memory I will always keep close to my heart." Gevinson said, "That is so sweet," then sighed and added: "I've read things on blogs that Rookie is for, like, weird girls—I'm sick of this weird girls trope, blah blah.' That's just lazy."

Fashion empire set in a bedroom

Chicago Tribune

Tavi Gevinson, the youngest of three daughters, began her fashion blog, Style Rookie (thestylerookie.com), at 11. Her parents weren't aware of it until she came to them and said she needed permission to be interviewed by The New York Times.

The rest is well-documented: Gevinson became a fashion-world celebrity. She was flown around the world to fashion shows, invited to write for magazines, asked to appear in commercials and give a TED Talk. Her blog, which often featured an unsmiling Gevinson modeling couture sent by designers, was so perceptive and lucid that New York magazine insisted she was a fashion-world hoax. It also was getting 50,000 readers a day.

Jump forward to 2010: Gevinson announced she would start an online magazine for teenage girls, inspired by the original, feisty Sassy magazine—opinionated, idiosyncratic and partly driven by what she likes now.

Rookie (rookiemag.com) launched in September 2011 using a bank loan obtained by Steve Gevinson, Tavi's father and business adviser. A year later, it has four employees (including Gevinson) and made smart use of Gevinson's connections, attracting contributors such as Zooey Deschanel and Judd Apatow. Its advertiser supported, though Gevinson runs the show. Her father said that "as painful as it is to see money going away," Gevinson does turn down advertisers she considers a compromise of Rookie's integrity.

Ira Glass of "This American Life" is an adviser. Anaheed Alani, 42, Glass' wife and a former Chicago Reader editor, is a Rookie editor. "I always said I wouldn't work for anyone who isn't smarter than me, and it's still the case," Alani said.

We found some stylish citizens walking around Wicker Park and got their take on a few questions: (1) Describe your fashion in three words.

(2) What inspires your fashion?

(3) Give the opposite sex some advice. (4) What do you do?

How to create eye-catching eyebrows

MCT

The right eyebrows can make or break your overall look, says Adrienne Bernal, stylist and cosmetologist at Belle Epoque Salon in Kansas City, Mo. (belleepoquekc.com). Full and shapely brows are back, and thin, skinny brows are a thing of the past, she says. Reign in or reshape your brows with these at-home tips from Bernal.

1. Trim: Brush all eyebrow hairs upward with a brow brush or comb. Then, with eyebrow scissors, trim the long hairs down to lay better within the brow.

2. Outline: Use a brow pencil to measure the correct length of your eyebrows. Start by holding the pencil straight up from your left nostril, and draw a vertical line where the pencil aligns with the brow above the corner of the left eye. This is where your brow should begin. Then, hold the pencil from the same nostril to the outer corner of the same eye and draw another vertical line where the pencil stops at the brow. This is where your brow should stop. Draw a small dot on your eyebrow where you want the highest point of your arch (usually straight up from the outer edge of the iris). Repeat on the other side.

3. Wax/tweeze: After drawing your guides,

» Brow Trio from Darac Beauty

wax or tweeze excess hairs surrounding your brow shape. The outer brow should gently taper off.

4. Fill: Fill in patchy spots with an eyebrow shadow that matches your brow color. Use a matte shadow to minimize shine and apply with an angled powder brush. Begin at the brow arch, and apply shadow outward going in the direction of hair growth.

Then, going against the direction of hair growth, apply shadow to the brow to fill in gaps.

5. Set: Use clear mascara to lightly cover the brows and hold them in place.

6. Highlight: Use a matte powder in white or off-white to highlight your perfect arches. Apply directly under the arch of each of your brows and blend.

Premedicine and Professional Health Careers

The Premedicine and Professional Health Careers program prepares students interested in applying to medical school and other health-related programs. Cameron Silver parties in pastels

Los Angeles Times
When Cameron Silver and Christos Garkinos opened their vintage salon Decades on Melrose Avenue in 1997, they changed the very fabric of fashion in L.A. Silver has since become a style icon in the city and beyond. He is slated to appear with Garkinos in the new Bravo show “Decades” (working title), giving viewers an inside look into the vintage buying for the store.
Always one to show up extravagantly clad in countless patterned jackets and slacks, Silver is a fixture at L.A. style events. He recently made an appearance at a party thrown by Theodora & Callum at Mr. C in Beverly Hills. He browsed the upcoming fall collection of accessories in a signature Madras patchwork sport coat, hot pink polo shirt, green cargo pants, penny loafers and a straw fedora. Get Silver’s laid-back, summer soiree look for less with these pieces.

Christy's crown nautical striped fedora, $16.99 at urbanoutfitters.com

Cargo pants, tarmac in green from Last Call, $69 at Neiman Marcus.

Izod performance polo in Cayenne pink, $19.99 at macys.com

shop Jet-setting underwear

What it is: Lightweight, quick-drying nylon/spandex-mesh underwear made for people on the move. They are designed to hang dry within hours. Give-N-Go is treated with Aegis Microbe Shield to stay fresh and resist odors. There also are men's Give-N-Go briefs and boxers ($20-$30).

The good: These are the underwear equivalent of the Energizer Bunny because they keep going and going with a quick wash between wears. We used to pack enough underwear for each day of a trip, but now that these have become favorites, we'd rather wash them daily so a few pairs can easily work for a seven- to 10-day trip. Rather than pack liquid detergent, we usually use shower gel or shampoo to wash the Give-N-Go in a sink. They dry within a few hours. We typically wash them before bedtime so they can dry overnight. For days when we want to feel more feminine, we wear the more expensive Give-N-Go lacy bikini ($22).

The bad: We wish they were a bit less expensive. Our maximum price for underwear previously was $10. But then again, the Give-N-Go can do the work of three or more pairs of underwear on a trip.

CLINICAL RESEARCH FOR MIGRAINE HEADACHES

'Trainspotting' author brings misfits back

Reuters

Two years after "Trainspotting" author Irvine Welsh moved to the U.S., his infamous imaginary Scottish working-class heroin addicts are now descending upon America.

The 53-year-old Scottish writer is working on a new play, "Trainspotting USA," in which the likes of Renton, Sick Boy, Spud and Begbie live in America, but first he has a new novel out, "Skagboys," a prequel to "Trainspotting."

Released Monday in the U.S., "Skagboys" explores how Renton and friends burst onto Edinburgh's heroin scene in the early 1980s amid both personal and social demons before the time of "Trainspotting" and its sequel, "Porno."

Welsh talked about "Skagboys" and how "Trainspotting USA" Americanizes his infamous symbols of Scotland's working class.

Why now write a prequel to "Trainspotting"?

I was moving and packing everything up, and I found these old discs from a computer I had written "Trainspotting" on. I realized there were parts of "Trainspotting" I hadn't used—about 100,000 words. I read through it and I got back into the characters again. Everyone knows what's going to happen to them basically, so it had to be done in more of a why-did-it-happen rather than a what-happens, getting more into the politics, changes in the society and in the community. So looking over it, I focused on another approach.

You have a play coming up, "Trainspotting

USA." Was it difficult to translate the characters and their stories into a U.S. milieu?

Some characters, like Renton and Sick Boy, worked very well. Spud also went well. Begbie was a difficult one because I think that the whole nature and culture of the way violence is expressed is very different in Scotland than in America. American psychopaths are very quiet, and for a Scottish psychopath it's difficult to make [that transition]. We tried to mold it to the culture's landscape. They go down to Mexico and all that, have a drug deal down there with prescription drugs. It's got a very different feel to it, to me it feels very American.

Any film plans for "Skagboys"?

We're talking about it. The guy who produced "Trainspotting," Andrew MacDonald, I'm going to have to talk to him about doing it rather as a movie or as a TV series. I think with the premium cable thing you can do some real art. I'm enjoying working with HBO because you can do so much stuff with your characters. ... There's more time to develop the characters.

You've been working on a lot of projects in television, film and theater. Any other novels in the works?

I'm doing a novel. The two lead characters are both American, and they're both women. One's a personal trainer and one's an artist. They're set in Miami, and their paths cross, and they become kind of obsessed with each other.

Use your skills to help others around the world, and bring that experience back home to benefit your career and community.

Fall is in the air, which can mean only one thing: Celebs need to get their high jinks out of the way while the getting's good. Don't worry guys, we're also ready for boots and hot chocolate. Duchess Catherine does the hula

How do you distract from the fact that literally the entire world has seen your knockers? By adorably doing the hula with your husband! The London Telegraph released video this week of Wills and Kate dancing with Tuvalu locals during their Diamond Jubilee tour of Southeast Asia. And we thought nothing could sound more epic than the Olympics. RETURN

Blake Lively's engagement ring reveal

The ever-helpful paparazzi haven't provided us with any wedding dress snaps, but we DID get to see the absolutely enormous engagement ring (and teeeny wedding band) she got from Ryan Reynolds. Seriously. A baby could use this thing for a football. GETTY IMAGES

Shaun White arrested

When one skates/snowboards for a living, one should not be surprised to find one's self in trouble with the law. So we weren't exactly shocked to hear about Shaun's arrest on vandalism charges after pulling the fire alarm at a hotel. Come on, dude, kindergartners do that stuff. GETTY IMAGES

Amanda Bynes off-roading

But seriously, this isn't really funny. Amanda was cited Sunday for driving with a suspended license, something she'd been previously warned for, and may face additional trouble. She also had hit-and-run charges filed against her earlier this month. We all know where this road goes. GETTY IMAGES

Unless you get all your celebrity gossip from one source, it might have come as a surprise

Wednesday to see how many entertainment websites claimed the "exclusive" news that Kristen Stewart and Robert Pattinson reunited in L.A. — people.com, usmagazine.com and eonline.com, among others, all were out front with their version of events. What none of the websites has exclusively, however, is confirmation from either actor that they are together again.

Bear in training

Kristin Cavallari is soooo happy to be a mom, you guys. The reality TV star and her fiancé, Bears quarterback Jay Cutler, appear with their son, Camden Jack, in the new issue of People magazine due out Friday. Cutler's first thoughts about his son? "He pointed out right away how big his feet are!" Cavallari told the mag. "And his hands were massive—he'll sure be able to hold a football."
